Support. Don't Punish. Voices from Asia.

29m40s | India, Myanmar, Thailand

This short documentary presents the experiences of health practitioners, development experts, people who use drugs and officials in dealing with drug use in India, Myanmar and Thailand. They explain why there is an urgent need to end the criminalisation, punishment and stigma against people who use drugs and people engaged in illicit crop cultivation for subsistence purposes, and call for drug policies that achieve better outcomes for health, human rights and development.

A broad consensus? It's time for change.

3m55s | United Kingdom, Austria

For over half a century there has been a global consensus around the idea that drugs should be eliminated through punishment and repression. This compilation of country statements at the recent UNGASS 2016 shows this "consensus" has been ripped apart at the seams, with progressively more countries realising repression and punishment have failed.

Followed by an interactive discussion led by:

Ann Fordham, Executive Director, International Drug Policy Consortium (IDPC).

Suhendro Sugiharto, Programme Manager, Indonesian Drug Users Network (PKNI).
