Foreword

Welcome to our latest Progress Report which chronicles another remarkable year for IDPC. The most critical highlight is our civil society shadow report, Taking Stock: A Decade of Drug Policy, which we produced together with many IDPC members and partners from around the world. We undertook this ambitious report to address the lack of a formal review by governments, or the UN, of progress towards the goals and targets set out in the 2009 Political Declaration and Plan of Action on drugs to significantly reduce or eliminate the global drug market by 2019.

The report attracted widespread global media attention and helped to secure the comprehensive ‘stock-taking’ language in the 2019 Ministerial Declaration by not allowing governments to shy away from the inconvenient truth of a growing global drug market despite the billions invested to eliminate it. The first report of its kind in UN drug control fora, it represented a watershed moment of civil society creating crucial accountability in the UN debate on drugs and consolidated the IDPC network’s role as watchdog in this space.

The drug policy reform movement continues to strengthen and diversify with many new players joining the calls for a serious re-think of repression and punishment as instruments of drug control. Repressive drug control measures are increasingly being understood as a form of state violence that serves to deepen and entrench structural inequalities which has garnered stronger interest in challenging current drug policies from other social movements such as those working on racial inequality, women’s rights, indigenous rights, LGTIQ+ rights to prison abolition and beyond. Building cross-movement solidarity on key human rights and social justice issues is more important than ever in the current troubling geo-political context and will be a core focus of the IDPC Secretariat in the coming years.

This year, I am pleased to share this foreword with Alison Holcomb, Chair of IDPC’s Board of Directors and Bikas Gurung, Asia representative on IDPC’s Members Advisory Council, who give their reflections on the past year for the network. We hope you enjoy reading this Progress Report!

In solidarity,

Ann Fordham
Executive Director

The global war on drugs violates human rights through myriad methods on multiple fronts. It resists science and defeats compassion by dividing our communities and marginalizing our brothers and sisters. The sheer scale, adaptability, and malignance of the war discourage even the most steadfast of caregivers and advocates. Within this darkness, IDPC weaves a net of hope and inspiration. The IDPC team shares high-quality information and ideas with people around the globe and deftly builds collective power through connection. They have a sharp and unwavering focus on the long-term goal of international treaty reform, achieved through strategic deployment of resources to grow their partners’ impact with individual states. The success of Taking Stock, IDPC’s shadow report to the United Nations’ 2019 assessment of the past decade of global drug policy, is a testament to the effectiveness of the organisation’s approach and the growth of the network’s power. It is an honor and, frankly, a thrill to have a front row seat to IDPC’s work.

Alison Holcomb
Chair, IDPC Board of Directors

It has been a trialling year for our communities of people who use drugs in South and Southeast Asian countries. The ‘war on drugs’ has compelled us to witness a traumatic environment, in which state-sanctioned violence, abuse, detentions, forced displacement, disappearances and even extrajudicial killings of our communities have been spreading across nations and regions. In this context, platforms for community-led and civil society organisations to coalesce, strategise and resist oppression are more vital than ever. As the South Asia representative to the IDPC Members Advisory Council, I am proud of the work and level of effort that IDPC has put as a global membership-based network of organisations for drug policy reform. In May 2018, ANPUD and IDPC co-signed a statement, supported by 188 NGOs, urging international authorities to condemn human rights violations perpetrated in the name of drug control by the government of Bangladesh. Both the UNODC and the INCB have since produced statements in reference to the Bangladesh crackdown underscoring the need for drug control policies to abide by international law. Similar collaborations between ANPUD and IDPC took place on the Philippines war on drugs in 2016 and 2017, not to mention the joint submission made for Cambodia and Vietnam to the Universal Periodic Review in 2018. As injustices and silence continue to grow across the region, so does our unrelenting fight to bring the perpetrators to justice, and our commitment to the movement and united actions.

About IDPC

The International Drug Policy Consortium (IDPC) is a global network of more than 180 NGOs that come together to promote supports evidence-based drug policies grounded in evidence, health, human rights, development and social inclusion at the national and international level.

We intervene at two levels in the decision-making process. Firstly, we facilitate networking and collaboration between civil society stakeholders, and seek to empower civil society and the most affected populations to better engage with and influence policy making processes. And secondly, we also engage directly in high-level policy making processes by providing analysis and expertise to governments and UN agencies on effective and more humane drug policy options.

IDPC members agree to promote five core policy principles in our advocacy work with governments and international agencies. Drug policies should:

1. be developed through an objective assessment of priorities and evidence
2. be undertaken in full compliance with international human rights law
3. focus on reducing the harmful consequences rather than the scale of drug use and markets
4. promote the social inclusion of marginalised groups, and not focus on punitive measures towards them
5. be developed and implemented based on open and constructive relationships with civil society.

To inform our overall advocacy strategy, we have elaborated a theory of change which includes four strategic priorities:

- Priority 1: Engage with governments at national, regional and international level to influence drug policies
- Priority 2: Facilitate NGO communications and cooperation
- Priority 3: Build the capacity of NGOs to better engage in drug policy advocacy
- Priority 4: Produce high-quality multilingual drug policy resources.

Looking back at IDPC’s 2018 Members Survey

For the last three years, the IDPC Members Survey has taken stock of progress and challenges in national drug policy debates worldwide. Among other indicators, the survey tracks perceptions of key influential stakeholders on drug policy, awareness and uptake of key IDPC resources, and the health of civil society participation and engagement domestically. Crucially, the survey provides an opportunity for the IDPC membership to exchange information and provide feedback on the work of the Secretariat.

This year, the survey was completed by 67 organisations from 47 countries, which accounted for 37% of the membership.

Below, we provide a brief overview of some of the responses received in relation to key perceived positive and negative drug policy reforms that took place over the past year or in the coming year.

Progress

Most responses in this section focused on harm reduction reforms, welcoming the implementation of projects by the Global Fund (e.g. Albania, Burkina Faso, Tanzania), by states (e.g. Colombia, Ukraine) and the key role of community members in deploying services (e.g. EECA region). Respondents also praised advances in the roll-out of ‘novel’ harm reduction initiatives, such as safer consumption sites (e.g. Belgium, Canada, Greece) and drug checking services (e.g. Argentina, Australia, United Kingdom), as well as in the expansion of naloxone provision (e.g. Australia, Canada, Lebanon).

A significant number of responses highlighted promising cannabis-related reforms. These included the coming into effect of the legal regulation of adult use (e.g. Canada, California); the expansion of these systems (e.g. Uruguay); court decisions paving the way for decriminalisation and legal regulation (e.g. Mexico, South Africa); regulation bills tabled before parliaments (e.g. Kenya, Portugal, United States); and a growing salience of the intersections between social justice and cannabis policy reform. Respondents also highlighted medical cannabis systems being fleshed out, to different degrees, in Colombia, Chile, Germany, Greece, New Zealand, Portugal, the UK and Zimbabwe.
Members also highlighted moves towards auspicious reforms in relation to the criminal justice system. For instance, responses reported models of decriminalisation adopted as the official position of two major political parties in Canada, implemented at the local level in the UK and partially enacted in Georgia as a result of a decision by the Constitutional Court. While other reforms diverting people who use drugs away from the criminal justice system were also noted (e.g. New Zealand, Chile and Ivory Coast).

Finally, respondents highlighted innovative gender-specific responses by the State (e.g. Chile, Costa Rica) and by service providers (Barcelona, Spain); as well as the involvement of affected populations in decision making processes (e.g. Canada, Malaysia).

Setbacks

The majority of responses discussing negative reforms concerned an increased burden of punishment on people involved in informal drug markets. These ranged from normative and rhetorical changes with impact on policing practices (e.g. Argentina, Colombia), to net-widening reforms (e.g. France, Kyrgyzstan), to increased penalties or the creation of new types of offences (e.g. Australia, United States, Uruguay), to plans to reinstate the death penalty for drug offences (e.g. the Philippines, Sri Lanka).

Measures targeting people who grow crops deemed illicit (e.g. Colombia) and people who use drugs in situations of great vulnerability (e.g. Australia) were highlighted, as were moves to militarise drug control efforts (e.g. Argentina, Mexico).

A substantial amount of responses also noted regressive moves with regard to harm reduction, including political pushback at the national and local levels (e.g. Brazil, Colombia, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Canada – Ontario), as well as the negative impact of austerity measures (e.g. Italy, Puerto Rico, Switzerland) and the negative impact of the Global Fund (e.g. EECA region).

Shrinking civil society space

Considering international developments regarding the state of civil society and civic freedoms, and as suggested by the IDPC Members Advisory Council, this year a new module was added to the IDPC Members Survey to gauge changes in the conditions in which civil society organisations operate.

For the majority of respondents, there have not been major significant changes to the legal/policy framework in this regard. However, a few respondents flagged regressions in countries including Brazil, Colombia, Hungary, Indonesia, Lebanon, Myanmar, Nigeria and Zimbabwe. In terms of concrete obstacles, respondents highlighted laws that impose sanctions for criticising the police or the government, or that restrict demonstrations in the public space.

When it comes to non-legal barriers to the enjoyment of civic freedoms, including government-sanctioned harassment, respondents flagged obstacles in Belarus, Colombia, Hungary, Georgia, Indonesia, Italy, Myanmar, Nigeria and Tanzania and the United States. Most of these impediments are, by and large, imposed by the state, particularly against organisations that work on human rights (e.g. Brazil, Zimbabwe), or that criticise the government (e.g. Brazil, Nigeria). Yet it is worth noting that, in some cases, non-state actors can also act as powerful opponents of civic freedoms, as is the case of drug-trafficking/criminal networks (e.g. Colombia).
April 2018

Building civil society capacity to promote reform in Francophone Africa

In April 2018, IDPC organised a ‘Training of Trainers’ workshop on drug policy advocacy in francophone Africa, in Dakar, Senegal. Funded by a small grant from the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), the training was co-organised in collaboration with the Gaston Berger University in Saint Louis, Senegal. Drawing lessons from similar workshops held previously in Bali and South Africa, the event was split into two key moments.

The first two days consisted in an intensive ‘training of trainers’ workshop involving four carefully selected drug policy advocates from Senegal, Guinea, Ivory Coast and Morocco. This included discussions on practical and logistical issues to consider when organising a training, moderating skills and how to use the IDPC Drug Policy Advocacy Training Toolkit to organise advocacy trainings tailored to different audiences.

In the following two days, an advocacy training was delivered to 20 participants from all over francophone Africa, and co-facilitated by the four drug policy advocates trained during the first part of the event. The training focused on a general introduction to drugs, the international drug control system, options for reform, advocacy for harm reduction and how to engage in the Support. Don’t Punish campaign.

The event showcased the growing interest for such trainings (with more than 90 applications received), as well as the success of this new capacity building model which IDPC hopes to replicate in the future, in partnership with other NGO partners.

May 2018

Condemning human rights atrocities in Bangladesh

In response to the drug war launched in Bangladesh in May 2018, and waged in a manner reminiscent of the Philippines anti-drugs campaign, IDPC and the Asian Network of People Who Use Drugs (ANPUD) put together an NGO sign-on letter calling on the UN drug control bodies to take urgent action to prevent further deaths and human rights violations in Bangladesh. By the time the letter was sent in June 2018, with 188 NGOs signing on, over 130 people had been killed during anti-drug operations and more than 13,000 people arrested for alleged drug offences.

As in the Philippines, Bangladeshi police were reporting that the killings of suspected ‘drug dealers’ had happened during ‘gunfights’ with rival gangs or law enforcement officers acting in self-defense during anti-drug operations. At the same time, health and harm reduction services for people who use drugs were closed down by law enforcement officers, and some clients disappeared. The Bangladesh Government also introduced a bill to impose the death penalty for drug offences. This violent and abusive approach to eradicating... drug markets has been spreading in the region, as seen in varying forms in the Philippines, Indonesia, Cambodia and Sri Lanka.

On the same day our letter was released, the OHCHR issued a statement condemning the alleged extrajudicial killings in Bangladesh which helped draw more media attention to the issue. Reuters reported on our letter as well. UNODC had released a (weak) statement on the situation in Bangladesh before our letter was released, and did not appear to take any stronger actions afterwards. The International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) only seemed to issue a public statement condemning the killings in Bangladesh through their Annual Report 2018 released in March 2019, while also calling for the abolition of the death penalty at the South Asia regional launch of that report.

Such actions and responses are critical to supporting ongoing advocacy against the deliberate use of violence and human rights violations against people suspected of drug offences, for example as part of an election campaign. These condemnations need to be sustained and scaled up in the face of the spreading contagion of the Philippines war on drugs in the region.

Six June 2018

SDP Global Day of Action

Support. Don’t Punish is a global grassroots-centred initiative in support of harm reduction and drug policies that prioritise public health and human rights. The campaign rejects the so-called ‘war on drugs’, understood as norms and practices that perpetuate the repression and oppression of people who use drugs and other populations in situations of vulnerability. Instead, the campaign seeks to put harm reduction on the political agenda by strengthening the mobilisation capacity of affected communities and their allies, open dialogue with decision makers and raise awareness among the media and the public about the need for reform.

The campaign’s yearly high point is its Global Day of Action, a worldwide explosion of creativity and solidarity that, on or around 26th June 2018, translated into a broad range of activities joined by thousands of participants in a record-breaking 234 cities of 98 countries! The activities organised included a street art outreach event in Bogotá (Colombia), a demonstration at the UN headquarters in New York (United States), a press conference in Parliament in Rome (Italy), a float parade in downtown Freetown (Sierra Leone), and a silent march of remembrance in Kathmandu (Nepal).

As the hosts of the campaign, IDPC was proud to support local partners’ mobilisation in all corners of the world through the provision of 90 small grants, prioritising initiatives in the Global South, from low/middle-income countries and from networks of disproportionately affected populations (people who use drugs, sex workers, young people). Financial contributions were supplemented with in-kind support, through the provision of materials (including the delivery of 50 packages of campaign goodies), a media advisory, editing, translations, among others.

Throughout the year, the campaign also hosted or joined 14 events, connecting with activists from across the globe through capacity-building workshops, as well as outreach photo booth stands and presentations at conferences. Support. Don’t Punish organised its first Communications workshop in Southeast Asia, in collaboration with the Rights Reporter Foundation, activating participation and cementing relationships with local partners from the region.

We continue to explore new ways and collaborations to strengthen this worldwide movement and invite you to follow campaign developments through Facebook, Twitter, the campaign newsletter and our newly-launched Instagram account. You can also communicate with us via email and Slack.
Advocating for women's rights in the criminal justice system

In 2013, the UN Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice estimated that globally one in five prisoners were incarcerated for drug offences. Although women continue to represent a minority of prisoners worldwide, the proportion of women incarcerated for drug offences is significantly higher than that of men, with the highest percentages to be found in Latin America and Southeast Asia. In countries like Brazil, Costa Rica, Peru, the Philippines and Venezuela, more than 60% of women in prison are incarcerated for a drug offence. In Thailand, this proportion reaches 82%.

Since 2015, IDPC has been working together with the Washington Office on Latin America (WOLA), Dejusticia, and the Organisation of American States’ Inter-American Commission on Women to improve understanding and stimulate dialogue amongst policy makers about the specific vulnerabilities faced by women imprisoned for drug offences and the disproportionate impact of punitive drug policies on women more broadly.

From 2016, IDPC extended work on this topic to Southeast Asia with an OSF-funded project involving country partners in Thailand (Ozone Foundation), Indonesia (LBH Masyarakat) and the Philippines (NoBox Philippines). The ultimate objective of both projects is to dramatically reduce the numbers of women incarcerated for drug offences, including those on death row, and to raise the voices of incarcerated and formerly incarcerated women.

Under this project, in July 2018 NoBox Philippines organised a workshop gathering several civil society organisations working on different issues (ie. women’s rights, children’s rights, and prison reform) to introduce them to the needs and concerns of women charged with drug offences, and present their research on the topic. Similar consultations and workshops were organised by partners in Thailand and Indonesia, with participants expressing interest in learning more about a topic that was new to them and a desire to continue working on the issue. Research was also published on the vulnerabilities and needs of women incarcerated for drug offences in Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand.

In the coming year, the projects in Latin America and Southeast Asia will continue to empower the voices of affected women in national, regional and global forums, and promote responses to improve the conditions of women in prison and reduce the incarceration rate of women.

Highlighting abuses against people who use drugs at the UN Committee against Torture

In August 2018, IDPC participated in a workshop organised by Penal Reform International on behalf of the UN Committee against Torture (CAT). The workshop was part of the CAT’s three-week long session. At the time of the meeting, the CAT was composed of experts from China, Colombia, Denmark (Chair), France, Mexico, Moldova, Morocco, Russia, Tunisia and the USA.

The workshop aimed to showcase the situations of vulnerabilities of a number of specific groups in detention, including women, children, LGBTI, ethnic minorities, people who use drugs and life-timers. Twelve speakers coming from NGOs and academia, UNODC, the European Court of Human Rights and a doctor intervened during the session. IDPC highlighted the many vulnerabilities faced by people who use drugs and drug offenders in prison, and presented cases of torture that people who use drugs are facing around the world.

In a welcome move, the CAT’s conclusions on Russia, which was being reviewed during the August session, expressed concerns over the lack of availability of opioid substitution therapy in the country, as well as the practice by the police of using withdrawal pain among people dependent on opioids to elicit confessions. These key issues were highlighted during the workshop – and have been the focus of constant NGO advocacy over the past few years, in particular from the Andrey Rylkov Foundation and the Canadian HIV/AIDS Legal Network.
In September, the IDPC Blog hosted two posts that focused on Trump’s Global Call to Action on the world drug problem. One of them, penned in collaboration with colleagues from the Drug Policy Alliance, the Transnational Institute and WOLA, highlighted the procedural and substantive problems concerning the document’s preparation and endorsement: The second blog post shed light on the conflicting rationales behind the Call and the recent report by the Global Commission on Drug Policy on the regulation of currently-scheduled substances for non-medical purposes. These updates received almost 1,600 combined views and, to some extent, exemplify what our external communications work seeks to achieve.

As per our Communications Strategy for 2017-2020, our external communications focus is fourfold:

• To raise awareness about drug policy developments and the importance of reform, highlighting often overlooked linkages with issues of absolute importance, such as public health, development and human rights.

• To leverage the most constructive aspects of multilateral drug policy governance to ensure accountability and support norms, narratives and practices that depart from criminalisation and punishment.

• To act as a sounding board for knowledge and evidence-based reform-oriented messages and learning, prioritising the voices of those most affected and of the IDPC membership.

• To facilitate and support IDPC members’ engagement with the public and the media.

External and internal communications are two sides of the same coin, which is why we also dedicate substantial efforts to the latter, through regular and targeted messages, closed social media groups and mailing lists (regional and thematic), quarterly Members Updates, calls and face-to-face meetings.

Taking stock of the lost decade in global drug policy

In October 2018, IDPC launched its landmark ‘Taking stock: A decade of drug policy – A civil society shadow report’. As the international community was set to meet in March 2019 to take stock of the past decade and discuss the future of global drug policy, the objective of the report was to assess progress made against the targets set out in 2009 and the broader priorities of the UN to protect human rights, advance development and promote peace and security. The report featured prominently in the media, with highlights in CNN, Newsweek, Le Figaro, El Espectador, The Inquirer and many others.

This report was made possible thanks to the contributions, feedback and comments received by over 45 civil society representatives from the IDPC network and beyond – and we cannot thank them enough for their help and support! The report was first launched at the UN headquarters in Vienna – while the discussions on the future of global drug policy were in full swing. The report was subsequently...
In recognition that Asia has borne the brunt of some of the worst human rights consequences of repressive drug policies, IDPC produced a shadow report specifically focused on the region. 10 years of drug policy in Asia: how far have we come? A civil society shadow report was launched on the World Day of Social Justice in February 2019, in Delhi in collaboration with the India HIV/AIDS Alliance. The launch event helped to provoke dialogue on the impacts of drug policy, as well as the origins of prohibition, and the need for countries to forge their own path based on their own traditions, know-how and circumstances.

Positively, the report had a major impact on the negotiations of the 2019 Ministerial Declaration, forcing the UN to face a reality that they could no longer ignore. This, and sustained advocacy throughout the negotiations of the Declaration led to the inclusion, in the final declaration, of an entire paragraph laying out the many challenges faced by the international community in tackling the illicit drug market – including the significant health harms, human rights concerns and development aspects highlighted in IDPC’s shadow reports.

The most important substances reviewed by the 41st Expert Committee were cannabis, tramadol and pregabalin. Although the Expert Committee meets behind closed doors, it is customary for civil society and affected groups to present inputs and recommendations to Committee members at the opening session of their meeting.

IDPC was among 14 civil society representatives selected to speak at the opening session of the 41st session, with our advocacy focus being on cannabis and tramadol. We argued that tramadol remains a vital medicine in the Global South, and that access should not be impeded by the imposition of international controls. With respect to cannabis we argued that classification in Schedules 1 and 4 was a historical error that should be urgently corrected.

There were many fears among civil society that the ECDD might recommend the scheduling of tramadol, especially considering the amount of pressure exerted by various countries and the UN drug control bodies on the WHO to do so. It was therefore very much welcome that the Expert Committee recommended to the CND that tramadol should remain under observation, but not be internationally controlled owing to its medical importance in the Global South, and that access should not be impeded by the imposition of international controls. With respect to cannabis we argued that classification in Schedules 1 and 4 was a historical error that should be urgently corrected.

IDPC has engaged with the ECDD on several occasions in the past, especially on tramadol and ketamine. As discussions
Building partnerships for change: The Expert Group Meeting on harm reduction

As a technical partner in the Global Partnership on Drug Policies and Development (GPDPD), a project implemented by the Deutsche Gesellschaft für Internationale Zusammenarbeit (GIZ) GmbH on behalf of Germany’s Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation and Development (BMZ), IDPC has co-organised two Expert Group Meetings on Harm Reduction (EGM): in Berlin, Germany, in February 2016, and then in Bangkok, Thailand, in October 2017.

These important forums brought together governments, UN agencies, academics and civil society, including people who use drugs, in a confidential setting to further develop the discourse on various aspects of the harm reduction response. The EGM in 2017 led to a Commission on Narcotic Drugs (CND) Conference Room Paper on the importance of harm reduction for people who use stimulant drugs, which was presented as a formal input to the 61st session of the CND by Germany.

The third EGM on harm reduction held in Bangkok in December 2018 was co-hosted by GPDPD, Germany’s Drug Commissioner’s Office, the Thai Office of the Narcotics Control Board, Harm Reduction International (HRI), and IDPC. Together with participants from several countries throughout Asia and other regions, including from national government agencies, civil society and communities of people who use drugs, we discussed the latest developments, research and good practices related to harm reduction at the global and regional levels, with a specific focus on Asia, the use of stimulant drugs and the need to engage families of people who use drugs. The EGM has proven to be an important forum for vital stakeholders to advance dialogue on harm reduction to ensure coordinated attention to priority and emerging issues.

Civil society collaboration on harm reduction

The Robert Carr Fund is an innovative mechanism to support international and regional civil society networks in the area of HIV. Through both activity and core funding, the Fund focuses on improving services, capacity and policy environments for ‘inadequately served populations’ such as people who use drugs. IDPC has been privileged to receive support in every round since the Fund was established in 2012 – including as the ‘lead applicant’ for a new three-year grant that started in January 2019.

The grant is for the ‘Harm Reduction Consortium’ – in which IDPC, HRI, Youth RISE, the Women and Harm Reduction International Network, the Eurasian Harm Reduction Association, the Middle East and North Africa Harm Reduction Association, and the European Network of People who Use Drugs come together to promote harm reduction responses and policy reforms, as part of a project entitled ‘We will not end AIDS until we adopt harm reduction and end the war on drugs’. While IDPC receives the funds, it onward grants the lion’s share to these partners for a wide range of different activities.

Over the next three years, and building on the success of previous Robert Carr Fund grants, the Harm Reduction Consortium will focus on a series of collaborative objectives:

- A global initiative to help strengthen the messaging and ‘storytelling’ around harm reduction and drug policy reform
- Coordinated advocacy around key UN structures such as the CND
- Coordinated advocacy and information sharing at key HIV-related fora (including the International Harm Reduction Conference)
- The global Support. Don’t Punish campaign
- Capacity building, including on governance and fundraising.

Each partner also develops their own annual work plans and activities relating to their mandate. For IDPC, this includes media training workshops, engagement with the UN Universal Periodic Review, and the creation of a ‘global decriminalisation map’ in 2019. The Consortium will also continue to provide small onward grants to local partners to strengthen their own advocacy capacity and work.

IDPC’s role as ‘lead applicant’ and coordinator for the Consortium fits perfectly within our commitment to support networking and capacity building for our members. It is one of several examples whereby the IDPC Secretariat has been able to perform this important role – allowing our partners to access crucial funding.

February 2019

Civil society advocating for drug policy reform in Europe

IDPC continues to play a key role within the EU Civil Society Forum on Drugs (CSFD) – an expert group of the European Commission and the official civil society engagement mechanism with EU institutions on drug-related issues. The CSFD membership was renewed for three years in 2018, and a new Core Group (the executive body of the CSFD) was elected – every member of which being an IDPC member: Fédération Addiction (chair), Diogenis (vice-chair), Youth Organisations for Drug Action, Utrip, Correlation European Harm Reduction Network and IDPC itself.

Within the CSFD, IDPC is responsible for coordinating a working group on the EU and international drug policy matters. A great part of our advocacy via the CSFD over the past year has focused on offering inputs and recommendations to the EU on the 2019 UN Ministerial Segment – recommendations which were very much aligned with IDPC’s own recommendations for the high-level event.

In February 2019, the CSFD – represented by IDPC and Fédération Addiction – was invited to present the Forum’s recommendations on the Ministerial Segment to the Horizontal Working Party on Drugs (HDG), composed of EU drug coordinators. This was a key opportunity to engage in meaningful discussions on the CSFD’s position and red lines on the Ministerial Declaration.

Following the meeting, and for the first time in the history of the CSFD, two members of the Forum (represented by IDPC and Fédération Addiction) were funded to attend the 62nd session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and its Ministerial Segment. The CSFD, represented by Katrin Schiffer of the Correlation European Harm Reduction Network, was also invited to speak at the high-level side event organised by the EU Romanian Presidency on overdose prevention among people using opioids. At the CND, CSFD members also had the opportunity to meet with the EU delegation and each EU member state representative in charge of negotiating resolutions at the CND.

This year was particularly fruitful for consolidating our relationship with the EU and strengthening our engagement with EU member states. At a time when key allies from Latin America have reverted back to a war-on-drugs approach, this type of collaboration is all the more important and we will continue to nurture it in the months ahead.

March 2019

An ever-growing movement for reform at the UN in Vienna

The 62nd session of the CND was particularly important for the reform movement as UN member states met to take stock of the past ten years of global drug control and define what would come next. Unsurprisingly, almost 500 NGOs were in attendance at the CND and its Ministerial Segment held from 14th to 22nd March 2019.
For IDPC, the CND remains a key moment for advocacy, but the Commission also plays an important role as a convening space for NGOs to strategise on global drug policy. As always, IDPC facilitated NGO participation in the UN event, providing financial support, logistical information, strategic advice via advocacy tools and webinars, IDPC members meetings (for Latin America, Africa and Asia) and communications via live blogging on the CND Blog in partnership with various IDPC members, the CND App, and dissemination on social media. We held our annual pre-CND orientation meeting for over 75 NGO representatives, enabling the network to coordinate on key advocacy messages, planned NGO statements in the Plenary session, and how to best feed into the negotiations of draft CND resolutions. While the IDPC Secretariat was involved in the organisation of nine side events, IDPC members co-organised more than 30 events this year on a number of topics related to drug policy reform, harm reduction, civil society engagement, and more. Via the Civil Society Task Force, IDPC also helped to coordinate NGO statements at the Ministerial Segment. And as the outcome of the Ministerial Segment was made clear, IDPC coordinated a public statement on what we believed were the main wins and failures of the new global drug policy timeline running from 2019 to 2029.

Another key role for IDPC at the CND is to ensure that the voices of those most affected by punitive drug policies are being heard. As a large part of our work this year focused on women incarcerated for drug offences, we supported two formerly incarcerated women to attend the CND, enabling them to meet with government representatives, UN officials and civil society to share their story and present their recommendations for reform.

Positively, NGO engagement with policy makers at the CND has greatly improved, with various civil society being involved in government delegations, others meeting regularly with government officials, and many seizing every opportunity to contribute to the positions held by their governments in Vienna.

However, despite the increasingly vibrant and progressive civil society voice at the CND, NGOs were faced with significant pressure, threats and intimidation this year – mainly from security at the Vienna International Centre. Having already been on high alert following a small and peaceful civil society protest in front of a stand praising the Philippines’ war on drugs in the building, security responded with a disproportionate and unnecessary strong hand in reaction to a group photo that the IDPC Secretariat had organised for the Support. Don’t Punish campaign a few days later, on the basis that holding a picture of a person with a Support. Don’t Punish logo constituted a ‘protest’. Meanwhile, our Brazilian NGO colleagues were faced with repeated threats and acts of intimidation from their government during side events focusing on the worrying militarisation of drug policies in Latin America. These are stark reminders that while civil society space at the CND is tolerated and has largely improved over the past decade, more remains to be done to ensure that the voices of civil society and those most affected by repressive drug control are truly heard and represented in UN debates on drugs.
The ‘Vienna consensus’ stifles progress on UN drug policy
IDPC acknowledges the [limited] progress contained in the 2019 Ministerial Declaration, whilst decrying the lack of a genuine evaluation of the past decade of global drug policy.

The International Drug Policy Consortium (IDPC) is a global network of NGOs that promotes objective and open debate on the effectiveness, direction and content of drug policies at national and international level, and supports evidence-based policies that are effective in reducing drug-related harms. IDPC members have a wide range of experience and expertise in the analysis of drug problems and policies, and contribute to national and international policy debates. IDPC offers specialist advice through the dissemination of written materials, presentations at conferences, meetings with key policy makers and study tours. IDPC also provides capacity building and advocacy training for civil society organisations.

This Progress Report provides monthly highlights to showcase some of the most exciting and impactful advocacy events and activities from the IDPC membership between April 2018 and March 2019.
